Chinese Steel Demand

"Chinese steel price continued to be strong with winter production cut while steel demand sustained solid"

- ✓ Construction sector showcased results better than expected although economic growth slowed and manufacturing weakened
  - 2019 properties development investment up +9.9%, construction starts gained +8.5%
  - Manufacturing PMI went above baseline 50 for 2 consecutive months in Nov and Dec at 50.2
- ✓ In 4Q19, steel price remained strong temporarily by restocking demand and winter production control, but auto and other demand sectors will still be weak
  - Distributors' inventory slipped for 10 consecutive weeks from Oct to Dec

* Bloomberg(2020.1), CISA(2020.1)

Demand by Region

"Global steel demand growth in 2020 likely to slow down with low economic growth rate and continued trade dispute"

- ✓ Chinese demand in 2020 is expected to grow around 1.0% from last year to maintain 900 million tons mainly due to weakness in manufacturing sector and limited room for economic boost measure
- ✓ Advanced countries will show only 0.6% demand growth as U.S. and EU expect low economic growth rate and sluggish industrial activities
- ✓ Emerging markets will pull global demand supported by government-led stimulus and expanded infrastructure investment in India, ASEAN and Russia

Raw Materials Outlook

While steel demand is slack, iron ore supply increased by major miners, which lowered the price down under U$80 early November. Since mid-Nov, demand strengthened as Chinese steel market improved and winter environment control was loosened, which pushed up the price to record U$89/ton average in 4Q "1Q fine ore price expected at U$90~95/ton" Steel production in China is sustained and restocking demand is expected ahead of rainy season in Australia/Brazil from Dec to Mar. Iron ore price is expected to trend between U$90~95/ton depending on steel demand and Chinese port inventory

Coking Coal

4Q19

1Q20

Demand was significantly weakened due to Chinese government's strict regulation on coal import, credit crunch in India and continued depression of steel demand in Europe and Japan followed by production cut. 4Q average coal price recorded U$140/ton, which marked the lowest in 3 years

"1Q HCC price expected at U$150~160/ton"

In China, coal import is likely to increase as domestic coal price is continuously higher than import coal and demand for import will grow due to renewal of annual import quota. Coal demand will also rebound in India as domestic steel sector is on a recovery. 1Q coal price will be higher than 4Q20
